Frequently Asked Questions:

1. Isn't it too costly to go Guild?

No. The flexible staffing provisions in the DGAs new Reality Television Agreements are more cost-effective than you may expect. The minimum rate for a Network, Syndication or Pay Television show is only $6,912 per episode and in Basic Cable the Director's minimum rate is fully negotiable.

2. Do I have to hire a full Guild crew?

No. The Guild recognizes that each reality show has unique staffing issues. Staffing requirements are dependent on the needs of the individual show and are not based on a universal template. The Guild never requires unneeded staffing.

3. If I sign for this show, will I have to sign all my shows?

No. The DGA signs reality productions on a show-by-show basis and companies are not obligated to produce all their other shows under a DGA agreement. We believe your experience with the DGA will be favorable and make you want to sign for subsequent shows.

4. Have other shows used DGA agreements?

Yes. Since September 2003, more than 300 reality television shows have signed DGA agreements. And many of these are for some of the most successful shows on air. Amazing Race, Fear Factor, Big Brother, The Biggest Loser and America's Next Top Model are only a few of the many reality shows produced under DGA Agreements.

WHAT PRODUCERS AND AGENTS ARE SAYING ABOUT DGA REALITY AGREEMENTS:

“LMNO Productions became signatory to the Guild in 1992, and since then the demands from the networks have changed countless times. We have found that the DGA has always been extremely flexible and open to finding ways to work together. Because of this, I am able to utilize talented DGA Directors on all my network reality shows.”
– Ed Horwitz, Senior Vice President of Production, LMNO

“The Guild understands that each reality show has its own particularities and is prepared to tailor its agreements to address the specific needs of each production. I think that’s why they’ve made substantial inroads in their organizing efforts, and working with DGA members makes for a better experience all around.”
– Andrew Jebb, Vice President of Production at Nash Entertainment

“As a representative of both directors and production companies for alternative television, I consistently find the DGA to be flexible and collaborative, which enables us to structure deals that accommodate all kinds of budget parameters.”
– Josh Levenbrown, APA Talent & Literary Agency

“As an agent specializing in the representation of television directors, I've found the DGA to be an invaluable resource. They take care of their directors from prep to post, and help streamline the deal-making process, making life easier for everyone associated with the production. It's a phenomenal organization, and I am proud to have worked closely with the Guild for nearly a decade.”
– Evan Warner, WME Entertainment
Abramson on directing reality television:

"The trick to directing reality TV is keeping it real while spinning kick-ass stories. It takes a particular skill set and talent to record the key moments as they unfold. You really have to be on your toes to capture the 'one take' nature of real people, real situations, and real time. You're often working with 'civilians' and if you miss their reactions, you miss the boat. But when you get it right, it's sheer magic!"

Androsky on directing reality television:

"Directing in the world of reality television today is sometimes a fuzzy, complicated endeavor. When I joined the DGA (1984), we were called 'video' directors. We had our own 'class,' we knew we were different, we were 'new.' That is the foundation of being a reality director: being "new." New ideas, new equipment, new ways to direct. Reality television is constantly evolving and challenging... One day it might be an 18-camera shoot with 14 network "executives" questioning you, 'I don't think the way he proposed marriage sounded real enough—can you have him ask her again?... but the very next day you could be all alone, shooting the sunrise on Bora Bora."

Borders on directing reality television:

“As the director in reality TV, you’re essentially trying to tell the story visually. It’s all about where you place the cameras and where you get the coverage to tell the story. It is completely different from working on a scripted show. However, you still need a director to run the set and act as field general.”

Breitenbach on directing reality television:

“Reality television has proven to be a profitable and enduring medium. Being born in this genre, I have developed a skillful hand in controlling the show both technically and master its storytelling. I have learned to embrace its constant evolution and barrage of last-minute changes.”
Bullen on directing reality television:

“Twenty years producing and directing in the entertainment and reality genres. Based both in L.A. and London. Huge experience in developing formats from initial treatments through completed shows. Extensive knowledge of adapting and tailoring formats for international markets. Long experience of producing both celebrity and public contributors on reality shows. Specialist in spectacular ‘live to air’ event television.”

Bruce on directing reality television:

“In reality production everyone loves to anticipate THE moment and have perfect coverage in place to capture it. What I find equally satisfying and just as fun is being able to steal from narrative filmmaking techniques and implement visual storytelling to elevate what would normally be a mundane scene into a classic moment. Keeping a happy crew and a calm set creates a better environment and always results in better scenes and more story from the cast.”

Calderwood on directing reality television:

“I’ve come to appreciate how my multi-camera skills have translated and helped prepare me for shooting reality shows. When the ‘moments’ happen, you must spring into action and mobilize your troops to follow the template you’ve prepared. But most importantly, in the midst of whatever chaos confronts you, never lose sight of what the director’s touch can do—how you can serve and enhance the drama unfolding with the visual choices you make.”
Connell on directing reality television:
“I never shoot reality without a fully approved script from the network...”
Croll on directing reality television:

"I love directing reality TV shows. It's a great feeling when you can coordinate multiple cameras, listen to the talent and contestants, give lighting direction, take notes from the executive producers, all while your AD is whispering a new development in your ear. Reality shows allow me to plan certain setups, while anticipating what's going to happen next. I always strive to get the greatest production values."

DeGroot on directing reality television:

"What I enjoy about reality television is that I have to use different muscles than when I direct in scripted formats. Anticipation, patience and a good sense of humor will take you a long way in reality production."

Gibbons on directing reality television:

“Reality television is so exciting these days; something I never forget once I’m back in the hot seat. It presents a unique opportunity: On one hand you’re trying to tell a story, with a beginning, middle, end, and all the story beats in between. But, on the other hand, you’re dealing with people and events, that, to a certain extent, you don’t really have control over; so the balance of focusing the story and molding its shape becomes the one thing you can control. And in hidden camera, you’re totally relying on your skill in camera placement and backup planning, since at least half of the ‘actors’ involved don’t even know they’re on camera.”

Henning on directing reality television:
“As a reality TV director I love that one minute I am in a fast-paced environment filled with chaos and excitement, and the next minute I am trying to find the story in a room with seemingly nothing going on. There is always a story to tell on a reality TV show set, and I love being the one to find that story and guide the cameras to it.”

Kramer on directing reality television:
“Capturing and creating heightened reality that is compelling yet believable is what reality directing is all about. I love the storytelling, the fast pace, intensity, spontaneity, travel, and collaborating with ‘real people.’ Without a doubt, working in reality is the best ‘life experience’ of any job in television.”
Lichterman on directing reality television:

"I find that the best results on a job are achieved when everyone is working for the same goal, and that we all work as a well-knit family. Once we all have the same goals that we've all worked out in advance, the results speak for itself."

Life on directing reality television:

"My experiences as a multi-camera director and making documentaries really prepared me for the transition to reality TV. When we were making Night at the Club in 1990, I couldn’t have imagined it was the start of so many narrative-style reality shows that have followed. Beats and moments are happening simultaneously so you have to be constantly monitoring everything that is going on and have skilled camera people guided by clear direction. Working with celebrities as well as with people completely new to the process, my work as a director has always brought out the best performances coupled with exciting visuals."

Messick on directing reality television:
"Directing reality TV is a lot like gambling...the stakes are incredibly high because it is only going to happen for real once. It is my job as a director to be educated enough about the characters, the environment, and the situation to put cameras in a position to capture what happens. Another important skill is being able to accept lack of control in the moment, in pursuit of greater success as the story unfolds. More important than anything else is hiring experienced shooters who complement your vision."

SEL DITCH on directing reality television:
"Before working in television, I was an architect for 14 years. The practice of architecture still inspires and informs my approach to making film & television with curiosity and creativity. Since that time, I’ve been showrunner and/or directed non-scripted television on a variety of topics: science, medicine, food, fashion, design, the environment, child birth, sex, new age practices, even exorcism.”

Simon on directing reality television:

“While most of my work is in the variety/live areas, the experiences I've had shooting ‘reality’ have taught me two critical things about my craft: Patience: which is not usually associated with live, but patience… wait for the magic, be prepared for it, have a plan for it. Adapting: You work with different cameras, different crews, and different producers. It's amazing to get outside one’s own box, and learn how others do it.”

Spheeris on directing reality television:

“We have merely scratched the surface of reality TV.”

Simon on directing reality television:

“I love the energy and immediacy of directing reality television: developing and capturing moments on the fly, editing in my head to grab the vital shots needed, tweaking a camera angle and framing to tell the story non-verbally...it is a full-throttle, right and left brain rush.”

Tanker on directing reality television:

"Because Big Brother is, in fact, a game show, the network standards and practices executives invoke rules to assure that game play is not contaminated. The difficulty in directing reality is that I can’t rehearse with the cast, as you would in other genres of television. Serious preproduction meetings with your team become extremely important to anticipate what might occur during our live broadcast.”

Additional Credits/Awards:
Next Action Star, Executive Producer, NBC; Battle For Ozzfest, Consulting Producer, MTV; Surreal Life, Executive Producer, VH1; Surf Girls, Executive Producer, MTV; Who Wants to Be a Superhero?, Co-Executive Producer, SciFi.

Telles on directing reality television:

"Reality TV is a lot like directing the Super Bowl: lots of excitement, lots of emotions, lots of things going on at the same time. My job is to get the right shots at the right time without being able to say, ‘Cut! Let’s do that again.’ Preparation is everything. As the director you have to not only worry about shots but, more importantly, you have to get the story that is unfolding before your eyes. Storytelling is ultimately king. You must know how to tell the story and get all the shots you are going to need in post. Because if you have a pretty show with no story, not many people are going to invest their Thursday night to your show.”

Thompson on directing reality television:

"Since I started working in the Reality genre 18 years ago, the most memorable moments still come from unexpected and unpredictable non-actor performances. Real people in unreal situations always creates surprising and entertaining results, whether flying off a cliff on Fear Factor or talking in a bedroom on Top Model. I’ve been so lucky to be a part of it, and thanks to everyone who I’ve been fortunate enough to work with!”

Toni on directing reality television:
“My career started as a production assistant in live sports television, which I believe is the original reality TV. From there, I was an associate producer on the original season of Survivor, where my multi-camera background from sports became an attribute to a style of directing that is a combination of defining the geometrical field of play, anticipating your characters’ behavior, and listening carefully as the story unfolds. Directing reality gives me a rush of adrenaline I cannot find anywhere else.”

Van Munster on directing reality television:
“Directing reality is all about anticipating the unpredictable.”
Wechter on directing reality television:

“What I enjoy about directing reality shows is the experience of immersing myself in a different world and then bringing that world alive to the audience. I rely on my background in scripted TV and film to make sure the story structure is right, but once the reality begins, you have to be ready to go with whatever happens. Nothing can match a genuine, human reaction, and you only get one take for those!”

Warren on directing reality television:

“Directing reality television programs is a thrilling endeavor. Reality shows not only cover a wide variety of compelling subject matter, but also are done on tight schedules and tight budgets. Yet a clear artistic vision and ultimately a high-level product can never be sacrificed. Directing reality television constantly tests your creativity and ingenuity to capture moments that only happen once in the most compelling and visual way. It is reality television’s fast-paced nature and challenges that makes going to work each day an exhilarating adventure.”

WECHTER on directing reality television:

“What I enjoy about directing reality shows is the experience of immersing myself in a different world and then bringing that world alive to the audience. I rely on my background in scripted TV and film to make sure the story structure is right, but once the reality begins, you have to be ready to go with whatever happens. Nothing can match a genuine, human reaction, and you only get one take for those!”
Weed on directing reality television:

“As a reality director, I am constantly challenged by what life brings each and every day. This is real life and is constantly changing. In the field, you have to be very fast on your feet. You have to know your characters and the story. We are modern day storytellers and it is what we capture in the field that enables editors to tell our stories.”

Weinstein on directing reality television:

“To me, directing reality television always requires a two-pronged approach. You set out to execute a well-planned event but remain alert to everything around you, making sure to capture the special, unplanned bits of human drama and comedy that crop up along the way. Making the most of spontaneous moments in the field, and getting as much genuine material as possible to the story producers and editors, is absolutely my biggest responsibility.”

Zasuly on directing reality television:

“Being on your game to cover ever-changing stories is what makes reality challenging and fun.”
BASIC CABLE REALITY SAMPLE SIDELETTER AGREEMENT:

DATE:

COMPANY CONTACT
COMPANY MAILING ADDRESS

RE: Company Name /“Program Name”

Dear Company Contact:

This Letter Agreement, when executed by both parties as provided below, will establish an agreement between the Directors Guild of America, Inc. (“DGA”) and _____________________, (“Company”) based upon the terms and conditions listed herein. This Letter Agreement is entered into between the DGA and Company on a non-precedential and non-citable basis and is for the above-referenced project only.

In addition to signing this letter agreement, Company agrees to execute the 2011 Letter of Adherence (One Project Only) to the DGA Freelance Live and Tape Television Agreement (“FLTTA”) and the DGA - Project Information Form with respect to basic cable program entitled, “_____________________” (“Program”).

Side Letter No.6 of the FLTTA will govern the employment of Director employed on the project, as well as any Associate Director and/or Stage Manager(s) if so employed on the project, as follows:

1. The Company and Director will negotiate the initial minimum compensation and working conditions. The Company agrees to pay contributions on behalf of the Director to the DGA Pension and Health Plans pursuant to FLTTA Articles 11 and 12.

2. Payment of residuals to the Director for any and all reuse of the Program will be a matter of individual bargaining and express agreement between the Company and the Director. If none of the Company's negotiations with Director of the Program result in any obligations of the Company to pay residuals, then the Company shall have no reporting or compliance obligations other than submission of one deal memo for each DGA-represented employee per paragraph five (5) below.

3. If employed, the Company will negotiate with the Associate Director and Stage Manager(s) to determine the minimum compensation and working conditions. The Company agrees to pay contributions on behalf of the Associate Director and Stage Manager(s) employed in the amount of 15.5% of the employees’ salary to the Producer - DGA Pension and Health Plans.

4. All other working conditions will be a subject for individual bargaining between the Company and the DGA-represented employee(s).

5. The Company will submit a deal memo for each DGA-represented employee working on the Program (form attached). The Company agrees to comply with the terms and conditions of FLTTA Article 4 (Guild Security) and Articles 11 and 12 (Pension and Health).

If this correctly expresses our understanding, please sign and return this agreement to my attention at the DGA. Otherwise, please call me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Lisa Layer
Assistant Executive Director
